Dance Group Of Carver-Price

The five Carver-Price students, above, are a newly organized dance group which presented a special exhibition recently for parents and students. Using Mahalia Jackson's recording of Malotte's "Lord's Prayer" they used classical ballet steps to interpret this well known religious number. Another familiar number, "Autumn Leaves" by the Ahmad Jamal Trio, was used in the program, which also featured calesthenics and various drills. Shown on stage, above, are Mary Jane Mathews, Lucy Ferguson, Izetta Lewis, Doris Meginson, and Connie Jones. Physical Education instructor, and director of the groups is Mrs. Joseph Lewis.

Wingfield Plans Full Production Of Men's After-Shave Made Here

Ray Wingfield, Appomattox native, finishing up the school year as chemistry teacher at Rustburg High School, plans to go Full time" next year in the production of Blue Spice", the men's after-shave lotion he has developed and bottled in his laboratory - factory in Appomattox.

"Blue Spice", which he first sold as "Wingfield's After Shave has been on the market a year and 'doing well," says Ray. Civil War cannon and cannonballs are displayed prominently on the label.

The Appomattox instlf is planned for other products to be sold by the young chemist. When ir full production, he plans to pro duce a higher priced after-shave, in addition to the moderately priced "Blue Spice" and then expand his line, to other times in men's toiletries.

Right now it's a one-man industry, but Wingfield plans to add more help as production increases. From his original output of lotion in three gallon batches, he has gone to 50-gallon batches, and hopes soon to purchase a tank capable of holding was held May 14, 1964 at 8 Principal buyers for his lotion Wingfield says, are the independent merchants in Appomattox, and as far south as Danville, west to Roanoke, east to Richmond, and north to Charlottesville. And he says that a big "thank you" goes out to all these merchants for helping make the lotion sales successful.

His business started, says Wingfield, when he perfected a formula for shaving lotion, principally 'to keep from burning it.' At that time he was a chemist with a Petersburg drug firm, having graduated from Lynchburg college with a chemistry major. The past two years he has taught chemistry at Rustburg High, and since last May, has been in part-time prodution here. With his initial success, producing about 1,000 bottles a month during the school year, Wingfield looks forward to full time production of 5,000 bottles a week, possibly within six months.
